THROUGH MY FATHER'S EYES: A SON'S AWAKENING

Are Two Weeks Enough Time to Stay Sober and Learn to Love Again?

Time will tell the tale as journalist Evan Howard is challenged to heal himself and become the person others know he can be.

You will be fascinated by this absorbing tale of one man's battle with alcoholism, isolation, and career distress. Evan Howard has two weeks to make some big changes in his life. As a talented journalist who is on a downward spiral heading toward Skid Row, Evan's behavior has been frustrating to everyone who cares about him. An ultimatum from his best friend and boss opens the door to the truth of his family history, particularly to the legacy of his hated, deceased mother. If he can stay sober and write the article, he can keep his job. If he cannot, he will be fired. Prepare to experience a roller coaster of emotions as Evan struggles to keep his commitment to his friend. And then, get ready for the ultimate challenge, as a serious collision and its crippling aftermath conspire with Evan's friends to teach him the most profound lessons of his life. Time, and how we choose to use it, are central themes in this riveting story about understanding, loving, and forgiving ourselves.

About the Author:

Linda Meyerholz is a licensed mental health counselor in Florida. She was a broadcast journalist in San Francisco in a past life. San Francisco is as much a part of this book as the characters who people it. Each character is a composite of people she has known, worked with, or observed during 27 years of monitoring people recovering from dysfunctional beliefs, attitudes, and behaviors. Psychology and journalism are more closely aligned than most can imagine. Meyerholz is already working on a sequel to this novel and is eager to discover how writer Evan Howard will behave as he begins life anew, this time sober.
